

Molecular Genetics - Central Dogma

The “Central Dogma” of biology refers to the DNA → RNA → Protein process.

NOTE: While we continue to use the term “Central Dogma”, it is honestly a silly name that stems from a strange history. Francis Crick coined the term before anyone had proved the DNA → RNA → Protein pathway. Francis thought the word “dogma” was a “belief that could not be doubted.”